Understand Flow of Docker

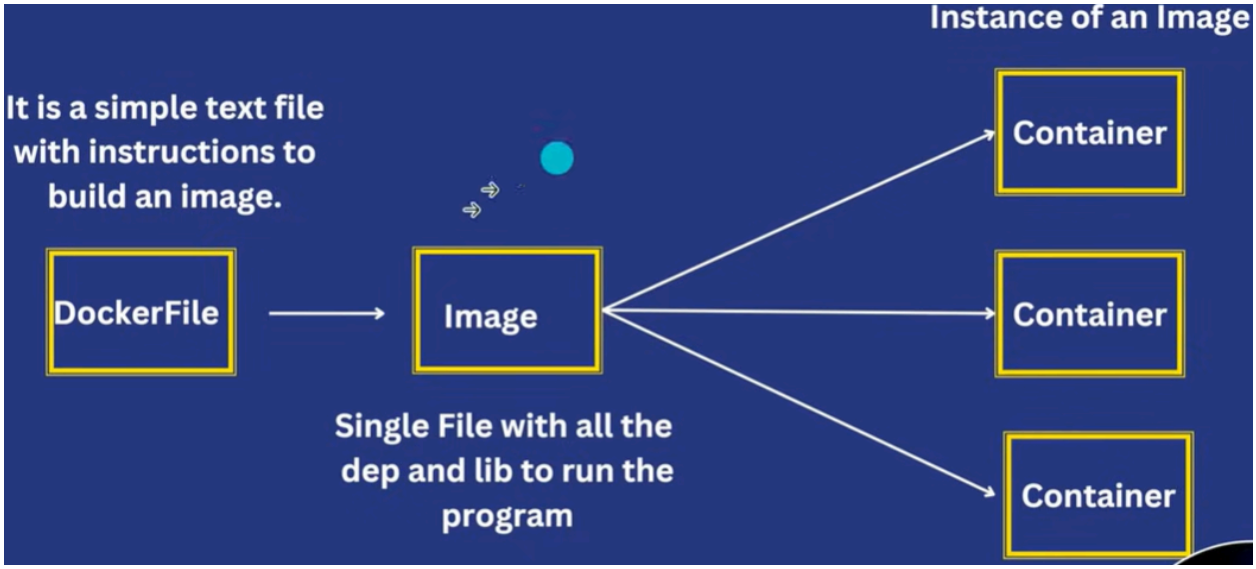

Image is what the developer sends to the tester, in the previous example.
By using the docker engine, we can run the docker image, after running the image, it creates the instance/process and this instance or process is called as container.
You can run image multiple times, and so does you can create its corresponding instances or containers.